with Mr. Hennessy we may probably learn in time by an inspiration from Tokio.

We are glad to be able to note the safe arrival of the S. S. Zamboanga. As we surmised, she had sought shelter and awaited the weather clearing up. She left Saigon on the 27th ultimo, after having undergone necessary repairs, and had made a good run up as far as the Paracels, when the weather became threatening, and the Captain deemed it advisable to seek shelter. He ran for a place called Cam Ranh Bay, about 140 miles to the northward of Saigon, which he reached on the 29th ultimo, and was joined by a French gunboat. A steamer was seen in the offing, thought to be the Madagascar, which was unable to make the Bay, owing to the strong current and heavy sea. After waiting nine days at Cam Ranh Bay the Zamboanga weighed anchor and came on. She passed a steamer, supposed to be the Madagascar (yellow funnel, black top and white yards), off Cape Varella on the 8th instant.

CHINESE NOTES.
Speaking of the Bulgarian Kingdom in the 9th century, Lieut. Col. Baker says: "Fires kindled at certain hours of the day conveyed intelligence of hostile incursions, &c." (See Baker's Turkey).
During the Turko-Chinese dynasty of Chow wu-wei dung was burnt upon eminences or towers separated several leagues from each other. The smoke thus caused was said to ascend in a body direct, and not to dissipate itself readily into space. [The Chinese name for the smoke towers or towers of smoke is 烽火台, Fenghuo Tai, and the Chinese name for the smoke towers is 烽火台, Fenghuo Tai. There are remains of these eminences on the road from Nank'ou (Peking) to Jehu; and if our memory does not fail us, they are still called 烽火台 or wolf-towers, by the local rustic.

The monkey appears to contribute extensively to the Chinese pharmacopoeia. The pus collected in the scab of a sick monkey which has sought out herbs for its own cure is used by the Chinese doctors to treat cases of phlegm. Moreover, menstruous siniae sanguis ad coarctandum leucorrhoeam necnon contra amenorrhoeam adhibetur. 猴茶 or 猴茶 are the substances in question, but our informant appears a little hazy as to which is which. The former is also called 王猴茶. Both are taken internally, and are mixed up with other substances in a soup [茶] or hot draught.

The Chinese oracle is also consulted by drawing chips of notched bamboo out of a hollowed bamboo case like a large dice-box which is first carefully shaken. [籤抽]. The results are distinguished into 內卦 and 外卦.

Drunkenness.
James Brooke, described as a clerk, was brought up, on remand, charged with being drunk and incapable. Fined half a dollar and ordered to pay forty cents for chair hire; in default, three days' imprisonment.

Larceny.

Chan Akwai, convicted of stealing one box of clothing valued at $4 from the steamer Douglas, was sent to six months' hard labour, and two hours in the stocks.

False Pretences.

Wong Ali, shopman, was charged by Mr. J. Parker, a clerk at the magistracy, with attempting to pass a registration ticket, as his own, which was issued to another man by the Registration department. Fined $5.

Chain Coils.

Ma Aung, and another, chair coolies to Mr. A. Miller, were charged with refusing to carry their master on the grounds of being overworked and consequently tired. They positively refused to carry Mr. Miller any more. It transpired in the course of the enquiry that they had on Wednesday last carried their master from his house to the Hongkong Hotel and back and afterwards to the Supreme Court and back. Fined half a dollar each; in default, three days' imprisonment.

(Gazette.)

We understand that a cricket match takes place this afternoon (Dec. 5th) at the recreation ground between H.M.S. Hart and H.M.S. Sheldrake; and that there will be another match to-morrow afternoon between the British Fleet and Local Cricket Club.

The Revenue cutter Phoenix arrived to-day (Dec. 6) from the Light-houses.

Our readers will observe in the advertising column, a notice issued by the acting Spanish Consul General of this port, that the Government of the Philippine Islands forbids, until further order, the introduction of all class of Foreign coin into those islands.

The steamer Glenartney, Captain Auld, left yesterday (Dec. 5th) for New York via Suez with a cargo of Tea.

FOOCHOW.

(Herald, Dec. 5th.)

Subscriptions to the Pagoda Anchorage Mortuary Chapel have now reached the full sum required; and we understand that the building will be commenced at once.

We understand that the Amoy Races are fixed for the 16th, 17th and 18th proximo. Many good ponies are in training, and some good sport is confidently predicted.

A return match at Cricket—first half a second of the alphabet—was played yesterday. The latter side were again victorious.

The earthquake noticed in our last issue was experienced at about the same hour at Amoy, Swatow, Hongkong, Canton, and other southern ports. It is conjectured that Manila has suffered severely.

It is stated that the rebuilding of the Chinese houses destroyed at Manoy on the 24th ulto. They allege that the ground is required for government purposes.

We hear that the Foochow Cricket Club have sent a challenge to the Hongkong cricketers, the match to be played on or about the race week. We trust that the colonists will be able to send a team worthy of their fame.

Training at the Tatar Camp is progressing steadily, but the course continues very hard. There was some "paving" on Wednesday last but without much result in the way of enlightening an inquisitive public. A few more "cracks" are, we hear, expected from Shanghai.

The dismasted British ship Arab—which was outside this port some time ago, asking for assistance—was, we hear, blown down to Amoy, her distress signals not having been answered by a Chinese gunboat within half a day. She was condemned a few days ago, and sold for the comparatively small sum of $5,500.

The rumour to which we gave publicity a short time ago about the probable retirement of the Viceroy at an early date is, we hear, revived; and it is further stated that in the event of the viceregal office becoming vacant it will be occupied by Ting Fatai. Ting's malady will not, it is whispered, preclude his acceptance of the superior post.

We hear that Messrs Douglas Laiprak & Co. have started a house in their own name at Swatow, under charge of Captain Pitman, late of the S. S. Douglas, who has been in their service as subordinate officer and commander for nearly twenty years. In consequence of Captain Pitman's retirement from sea-going life, Captain Young will, we understand, take command of the Douglas, while the Ratusa will be commanded by Captain Abbott.

The native officials here, we understand, had several interviews with H. B. M.'s Consul in regard to the Wu-shih-shan affair, but without leading to any satisfactory settlement. It is understood that the Provincial Government object to rebuilding the house, and that they also persistently decline to arrest Lin Ying Ling and the other implicated members of the literati. These terms, we believe, insisted upon, and we hope they will be rigidly adhered to.

Another large fire occurred in the western suburb of the City on the afternoon of the 3rd instant. It is said to have originated in the careless casting aside of some "joss" sticks which were left burning in a corner of one of the houses. The fire was first observed at about 2.30 p.m. and spread with great rapidity in a north-easterly direction, though fortunately it was confined to a limited area by firewalls. About six hundred houses, chiefly inhabited by the poorer class, were destroyed, but the loss would have been much greater had there been more wind. We have not heard of any loss of life.

A correspondent at Tamsui writes:—"On the 16th instant (Nov.) the German brig Diana grounded off the south entrance to the river and, though the little Feibong tugged at her vigorously, some days elapsed before she could be moved off the bank. Most of the cargo has been discharged, and the general impression is that the unlucky vessel will—after a little temporary patching up—be able to make Amoy—where it is intended to dock her. Fever is very prevalent at Tamsui and Keelung; and there have been a number of fatal cases amongst the natives at both places."

We take the following from the Amoy Gazette of 26th ultimo:—"David Manson, subscriptions to the 'David Manson Memorial Hospital' to be erected in Takao, now amount to nearly $3,000, and subscribers thereto will be pleased to hear that the work will be commenced very shortly. Chinese officials and merchants in Takao and Taiwan have come forward most liberally, and in some cases have given purely out of respect to the memory of him whose labours in former years they so much appreciated."

Our readers, by a majority of whom the late Doctor David Manson was known and esteemed, will no doubt agree with us in thinking that a more appropriate form of memorial to such an ardent and devoted lover of his noble profession could not be devised; and we trust that this good and useful work will meet with a liberal and general support.

Here is an item of news for our fair readers, which we trust they will turn to advantage. A better field than China for collecting new and rare plants—whether the great variety of patterns obtainable, or while collections may be formed at a comparatively moderate cost.—It seems that fan-collecting is to be the rage next season; and it is stated that a lady novelist, taking advantage of the fad, is going to write a book on the theme.

SHANGHAI.

(Courier.)

H.M.'s Gunboat Swinger arrived to-day (Dec. 6th) from Chinkiang.

The flag of Rear-Admiral Baron Staelberg, arrived to-day (Dec. 6th) from Nanking.

The sixth Report of the Chinese Hospital and Dispensary, in connection with the London Mission, Tientsin, for 1876-7, states that over seven thousand cases were treated during the two years. During the nine years in which the Hospital has been established, over 53,000 cases have been received and more than 121,000 visits paid. The famines of the last few years have caused a great amount of sickness and the work of the Hospital has been much increased in consequence. "Each year," we are told, "there has been pestilence, in the shape of famine or other fevers of a typhus type; and though from the dispenser being unable to give the time, comparatively few are found upon the register, more than once the faithful labours of the staff have resulted in their own almost mortal sickness." At the end of 1877 there was a balance owing of £179.48; and further subscriptions are needed to enable the institution to meet the demands made upon it.

We have received a copy of the tenth Annual Report of the Hospital for Chinese at the American Episcopal Mission, Shanghai, for the year 1877. We learn that 19,970 patients were treated at the Hospital during the year, including 107 foreigners (Africans and Malays). There were ten deaths among the indoor patients during the year. The Medical Officers (Dr. Henderson and Dr. Zeeh) in the Report remark—"It is greatly to be regretted that the Mission has as yet been able to do so little towards the improvement of the premises in which the work of the Hospital is carried on. The usefulness of the Institution continues to be seriously restricted by the condition of the building, which is only fitted for the reception of the poorest class of patients." The Rev. Dr. Nelson adds:—

"We have been striving to accumulate a fund for the erection of a more suitable building for the Hospital, as well as to procure a better site than that on which it now stands. A good site we have not yet got, but shall continue our efforts to secure one, and shall be obliged for help towards this object. The area of ground required need not be large, but it is desirable that it should be near the New Police station. The fund for building is now enough to give good hope of a suitable Hospital, if we had the proper site. The prestige of nine years of service, and of the good done to numbers from various regions around, makes this hospital an institution of considerable value to the natives of many places. We trust that in the future, both in a benevolent and a Christian point of view, its benefits will be yet more extended. To the surgeons who have given their time, their skill and their kindly services to the Hospital, we would here make our grateful acknowledgments, as well as to those who have contributed the means of its support,—and ask from them all a continuance of their charity."

The Treasurer's account shows a credit balance of $1,167.52.

NANKING.

Nov. 27th, 1878.

I am painfully aware that my letters from this place are rapid in the extreme. True, there is never any news; but what excuse is that for a newspaper correspondent? To-day, however, I have a piece of intelligence the importance of which will amply atone for all past shortcomings. The mandarin have issued a proclamation of the supreme significance to every foreigner and native in the Empire. Here in Nanking I almost dread to think what the result will be. It will be felt in every household, it will create consternation in every street, it will affect everybody, more or less, from the Viceroy to the village. In a word, the people are forbidden to eat shrimps, on the ground that these toothsome molluscs are nothing but locusts in disguise! Locusts, say the enlightened and scientific authorities of this city, are apt to fall into the water, where they are transformed into shrimps; therefore it is dangerous, improper, and unnatural to eat them, and the people are forbidden accordingly. Now shrimps are regarded as a favourite luxury by most of our local gouverneurs, and no doubt great dissatisfaction will be expressed. At present, however, the city is quiet and no immediate tumult is anticipated. Indeed, it is most likely that the paternal care of the mandarins will be accepted in a spirit of gratitude, and that their surprising scientific acquirements will glean for them the admiration and respect that they deserve.

And now I have again to cry peccati for the unmerited contempt with which I treated what now turns out to be the true reason for the recent wedding of the walls. I must promise that the operation has not been confined to the facade of the walls, but has been extended all along the southern side of the city on the broad road which runs along the top of the great bulwarks. This road, which was until recently a tangled wilderness, has now been carefully cleaned, all the grass and shrubs rooted up, and something like a decent thoroughfare made of it; and the object of it all is that there may be no difficulty in manipulating cannon in the event of General Li making his appearance in the province. I have this on what I really believe to be very good authority, and have every reason to regard it as the truth. At present I believe the local literati—one of the leaders of the 'T'ung-ping insurrection, as of course your readers are aware—is marching towards Anam; but as I said before, Mr. Li is a far-sighted and keen statesman, and he would be an early bird indeed who should ever catch him napping.

In a dirty lane, not far from the South gate, there stands a squalid hotel, the appearance and surroundings of which are exactly the reverse of inviting. Entering, we find ourselves in a dark, damp room—not half so nice as a decent stable—where we cross a tiny yard to what we may term the mansion proper. This is an ordinary Chinese house of mean and unattractive appearance, with a frail and rickety-looking upper story reached by what may be termed a balcony. The place is inhabited by three Chinamen, and there is nothing to distinguish it from the other dirty hovels by which it is surrounded. But the initiated know better. This is the establishment of the American Presbyterian Missionary Board in Nanking, and the first named room is the Chapel. For ten months it has been left to take care of itself, no missionary having been appointed to replace the deceased incumbent of the post. There is a native evangelist living there—a very decent man he is, too—and the others are servants. I do not think I am using a harsh expression when I speak of the whole affair as by no means creditable to the cause. The structure itself is one which few respectable Chinese, one would think, would care to be seen entering; although one must in fairness remember that Chinamen have but general ideas of themselves of cleanliness and comfort. But considered as a foreign residence; as the headquarters of a well-known Board of Missions in the second capital of China; as one of the two establishments representing Protestant Christianity in Nanking—we can only say that it makes one thoroughly ashamed to be in any way identified with it. The unfortunate evangelist, of course, has been left without any instruction since the death of the former resident; while the two or three other converts must be even worse off still. A gentleman from Soochow paid the place a flying visit the other day, and I hear that a native pastor is to be sent there shortly from Ningpo, who will, of course, assume charge. But what impression can have been made upon the Chinese by the long neglect and by the dirt and squalor of the whole concern,—why, your readers are as well able to judge as I.

We had a fine display of bunting here the other day. Our friendly neighbour, the military mandarin in charge of the adjoining garrison, hoisted a flag in honour of the anniversary of the death of the Arsonal Superintendent's grandmother.

Weather mild and cool and pleasant, but for some reason exceedingly unhealthy.—Shanghai Courier.

TWICE ROUND THE CLOCK IN PARIS.

Paris, October 12.

In a book which is now rare, though it was written but ten years ago, Alfred Delvau did for Paris what Mr. de la Motte did for London in his series Twice round the Clock. The priority of idea is with the English writer; keenness of observation and charm of conversational style are about equal in both. Delvau, like the born Bohemian that he was,—he is now more irretrievably of the past than his book,—began his 'Parisian Hours' at three in the morning with a glimpse of the market-gardens discharging at the Halles their carloads of fruit and vegetables for the day's consumption. They are crossed by other highfliers, a little better deserving of the name, having dead oxen and sheep for passengers from the abattoirs to all the butchers' shops within the fortifications. At this same hour the chiffonniers used to be starting on their rounds; but in consequence of a recent municipal decree, the peripatetic ragmen now go to business rather later than the stalls at the street-corners, where, since they will not go to Moly, as in the London fashion, Moly comes to them. At five the workmen are afoot, but most of them will presently be at a standstill chez le maitre waiting for the keeper of a dram-shop—who will supply them with the wherewithal for the 'killing of the worm.' The only other civilians about are the crowds of haggard travellers from Havre, Strasbourg, Brussels, or Berlin, who have just been turned adrift in Paris from the night train. Those forporsals or sergeants in heavy marching order are messengers from their respective barracks to the bat-maj in the Place Vendôme for the mot d'ordre of the day. At the same time the postmen are streaming into their staff-office in the Rue Jean-Jacques-Rousseau to fill their boxes for the first delivery. When will Paris rebuild this grimy street, compared with which our chief office in St. Martin's Lane is as a novelty of yesterday! At six they sound the Angelus from the churches; the Catholic musicians are calling the faithful to prayer. The gates of the cemeteries are opened to the gardeners, marble-masons, mourners; and those graves that the first are not paid to moisten with fresh water, the last will moisten with their tears. Half an hour later the newspaper-porter is leaving your subscriber's copy at the door. Your concierge will let you have it as soon as his wife has finished the last instalment of the feuilleton, and he has run his eye over the morning article and the intelligence of the day before yesterday, which does duty for the morning's news. At seven the grocers set out for their early gallop in the Bois to have the first and the best of your wares, as the concierge has the first and the best of your wares. It should be no more than an ample to breathe the sweet air of the morning breeze blowing, there is no holding the things in. You might think you were in London for the English look of all the actors in this part of the play. They have to pattern, and there is something more purely indigenous in the shop-girls, who are setting out for the great magasins, in dresses as plain as palm-tree weeds, which they will presently change for silk attire. They used once to be called gilles; and in spite of many a lament over the decline of romanticism in the manners of Bohemia, not much more than the name is changed. At eight the main division of the army of street-sweepers advance upon the city, and, opening all the sewer-pipes, give it its first morning wash. Messieurs of the London vestries, please copy; but I know you will not. The gilles turn their backs towards the foies de Droite, the gilles de Droite leave home for the workshop, at three hours ago, saw the carpenters and bricklayers, setting out of uniform at present, they look like other human beings; but when once they have unfolded the little bundles now under their arms, and wound the white thereof about their throats, we shall see distinctly that they are of another order. While they are creeping indoors to work, the notaries clerks, in uniform coats of another colour—blue—are rushing out. These are the men who present the little bills, and who are about the most unattractive visitors that ever ring at your door. Later on we shall see them coming home, their huge lids pocketed bulky with chained portfolios, stuffed with the day's spoils. The calling is not without danger; one of them was entrapped into a house the other day, and murdered for the sake of his burden. The murderer was not executed. There were extenuating circumstances; it was all done for the sake of his wife and family! The victim, indeed, left a widow and orphan; but this is a detail. We shall never fathom the depths of French logic; let us pass on. Room for the students of the Louvre, who are going to their daily task of producing originals of the great masters, which have at least one undoubted advantage over the works on the walls—that of being in better repair.

Nine o'clock: the pupils of the Conservatoire are in full swing of operatic melody, or in full cry of dramatic declamation. The annual competition will suppose, at a hand, when they will sing or recite for prizes before a public défilé, and the best of them will pass at a bound to one of the worst operas or to the best theatre in the world. This establishment illustrates an idiosyncrasy of the national mind. Frenchmen believe that, as acting is an art, you must take lessons in it, just as you would in painting, to say nothing of the three R's. There are ninety professors for this and kindred branches—only think of what that implies in the number of pupils, and of what the two together imply in noise! The Civil Service clerks are going to their respective bureaux, to lead the life of ease which is only foisted in regard to the same class at home. They are wretchedly underpaid—for the honour of the thing—and are rather proud of it in consequence. Most of them will get a bonus by and by in the shape of a red ribbon for the buttonhole, an article which Time puts on his icon at the moment of the young clerk's admission to the service, and which the steady-going old worker fashions for the period of superannuation at the rate of about a millimetre a year. As early as ten some of the actors and actresses may be seen hurrying to the theatres with the zeal of prophets who have received a call. Those among them that have been discovered to be stars of the first magnitude by the public loggion are in their ebullience; the nameless debutantes are on foot. All must be punctual, rehearsal with a French company being part of the exceptionally serious business of life. An hour later the journalists will be turning in to do their spell of duty for the evening papers. They do not mind working a little in the day; but beware of trying to put them to the drudgery of the pen after dinner. They reserve their evenings for society and the theatre, and are with difficulty to be tempted into hard labour after eight by offers of money or fame. This circumstance determines the character of French journalism, and leads to the publication of many of the important papers at the close, instead of at the beginning, of the day. 'Is thy servant but another kind of journeyman baker,' says the French leader-writer or chroniqueur, 'that he should toil all night to provide these with hot news for breakfast in the morning? The practice gives both news and comment a certain staleness of flavour; but their authors try to get over that by post-dating the evening sheet. Bolder, therefore, that everything they relate happened yesterday instead of the day before, and all will be well. When you have seen messieurs les journalistes off to their work, you may look in at the Russian church for the morning mass—a very fashionable entertainment; and on your return towards the centre of Paris, you may amuse yourself by counting the weddings at the doors of the mairies.

Twelve o'clock: high noon used to be announced by a cannon in the Palais Royal, fired by the heat of the sun; but this instrument has been voiceless since the war. It is the almost solemn hour of the French breakfast; as every one knows, a very solid meal, which cuts the day clean in half, very often without leaving any remainder for effective work. Reckon two hours lost at the very least, unless you are a drudge restrained by the tyranny of capital to one. It is not a moment too much for your heavy meal, your coffee and petit verre to help you to digest it; your game of cards, if you are in the bourgeoisie; your lounge and chat at café or club if you are not. When it is all over it is nearer three o'clock than two, and now go back and finish the day's work if you can. Travellers that want to take French cities by assault should advance at the hour of this siesta de gouvernement; it would be better than midnight for the certainty of finding nobody on the walls. After what has been said we may safely leave the hour of one a dead letter, or rather a dead numeral. Paris is still sitting at meat. At two there is a show of reviving energy, especially since the Chambers have sat at Versailles. In fact, this has already led to some interruption of the stately business of life at a still earlier hour, through the necessity of catching supplementary trains; but I have forbore to chronicle it in its due season, because I am convinced that it is only a passing innovation. At two, then, some of us who want porcelain for the drawing-room or boudoir, or carved oak for the dining-room, turn the faces towards the Hotel Drouot, for one of the half dozen sales that are going on there every day. The graver sort will meanwhile be trooping—no straggling—towards the Institute, if it happens to be the day of the weekly sitting. At three the avenue of the Champs Elysees is crowded with the people driving or riding to the Bois. I am going to attempt a description, but not here; wait for my forthcoming volume on Sunrise, the Falls of Niagara, Potten Row, the Foresters' Fête at the Crystal Palace, and other fresh and original themes. I mention four o'clock only to show that there is still a Galerie d'Orléans at the Palais Royal. No one might have thought it, and yet half a century ago a man had but to go there at the fashionable hour to make sure of meeting his enemy or friend. The reputation of the place as a promenade has, in some sort, survived to this day among the country people and the French from the other side of the world. You may still find there curious groups of colonists and provincials, who believe that in treading the classic pavement (if this abandoned hothouse they are doing the right thing—as they are, since it saves confusion by keeping them away from the Bois. At five you may return to the Boulevard to see the crowds forming in en queue at the doors of the popular theatres, and the more curious spectacle of slow poisoning by the mile at the cafés, where the absinthe has begun to flow. At six the superior layer of the tondus sociales is in movement homewards. Work is done for the professions and 'high commerce'; finance knocked off an hour ago—which reminds me that I have let the occasion slip of saying some thing about the Bourne. It is an hour without character; people are simply preparing by the artificial fasting of bitters for the evening meal. Seven, dinner; and—but no! I digress—my account of Paris at this hour for the forthcoming work. At eight the men of heroic mould have risen from table to take their place at the theatres; and there are thousands who will make the sacrifice for that object, if for no other. The weaker brethren struggle in at nine for the second act. Late dinner is ruining the French drama; M. Sarcey says so, and I am bound to believe it, but I should never have guessed as much from the aspect of the houses. I have six hours before me, and hardly more than as many lines to do them in, or this letter may be mistaken for the manuscript of the threatened volume. Let me finish, therefore, by merely transcribing the titles of my notes. At nine, the Boulevards again—closing of the churches. At ten, behind the scenes at the Opera. Eleven, café concerts, balls—Gypanny and other, but chiefly Gypanny. Twelve, theatres emptying, cafés filling. One: night-houses winked at by the police. Two: other night-houses not winked at; and, for an interior of the most picturesque animation, high play at the clubs.—World.

A Murid correspondent to a contemporary says:—We have news from Eb Hassa that the Arabs have revolted against the authority of the Turks and have leagueed to drive the latter out. Some Turkish men-of-war with troops from Bussorah and Baghdad, it is reported, have been despatched by the Turkish authorities to the assistance of the small local militia in Eb Hassa. Eb Hassa is situated on the main-lane, opposite the island of Bahret, and has been a bone of contention between the Arabs and Turks for the past few years. Whenever the Turks found themselves sufficiently strong they occupied it, and their superior arms and discipline always enabled them to do so without serious opposition. The Arabs, on the other hand, jealous of the usurpation by foreigners of what they have hitherto looked upon as their birthright, have as frequently sought opportunities to regain their independence. Eb Hassa was last seized by the Turks just before their troubles in Europe, and was drained of troops to meet the demand for men during the late war. Turkish aggression in Arabia has always been a source of weakness to the Arabs, and though Eb Hassa forms no part of H. B. M.'s Sultan of Muscat's dominions, the anxiety with which the approaching struggle is looked forward to, and the undisguised sympathy everywhere expressed for the Arabs, show unmistakably that the feeling against the Turk is widespread.
